CENTENNIAL NOTICE.

 This Centennial year let everybody beware of the worthless imitation of DAVIS' CRONK BEER offered for sale in this city, and see that they get the genuine article. Look out everywhere for the sign

DAVIS' CRONK BEER!

And for the Bottles that have Metallic Cork-Fasteners, and not tied with strings. The sign of the imitations have no Manufacturer's name, but simply "Cronk Beer." The Manufacturer of any Superior Article takes a pride in attaching his name to the same, while the imitator has to OMIT HIS, simply because he knows his article is inferior. After you get the genuine article, you can sing the following song:

THE GREAT SALT LAKE.

Air—"The Dawn of Day."

To Great Salt Lake I journeyed,
One summer's hottest day;
And like a sea it stretched in view,
With all its islands gay.
I reached the shore delighted,
Quite anxious for a treat;
When to the briny waves I plunged,
To cool the noon-day heat.
To swim therein was aw-ard,
So I made the waves my bed;
Then floated like a boat with sail,
And steered my course ahead.
Soon after this strange voyage
Was o'er, I made a halt,
And came on shore well washed with brine,
Which turned me white with salt.

Salt Lake's among the wonders,
To sink no one need fear;
One-fourth is salt, more than enough
To salt this earthly sphere.
It sports no fish like oceans,
But has its gulls to show;
This "dead sea" lake is crystal-like
The brinest waves I know.
It swallows up the Jordan,
And other streams beside;
But has no outlets any where,
Unless beneath its tide.
The sun sank down deep-crimson'd,
His couch the waves to make;
While I would hasten to my home,
To sing of Great Salt Lake.
